Mr. Thain brings his extensive experience in several business areas as well as his experience as having been a CEO and chairman of several companies around the world himself to this book. He brings his insight and knowledge into an interesting and easy to read description of a selected few companies and explains e-retailing for each one as it is today. He makes several good points throughout the book, one being that FMCG (Fast Moving Consumer Goods) drives the world's advertising industries and this includes social media mavens: Google and Facebook to name just a couple. As we know, if a company is not already using all social media avenues available to their advantage, they soon will be--e-retailing is huge for companies to promote and market their wares. This book would make an excellent educational book for those in Marketing, Advertising and/or Business. Not only in general, but possibly specifically for anyone in that career path for a company that was analyzed in this book. Greg's skill as a speaker reach out here as well in written format. Each chapter begins with often overlooked questions by both employees and students studying business--how, where, when, why and by whom the company was formed and founded--and then moves on to how each business evolved after it had become established. Easy to understand as each section is in chronological date order. Interestingly, he also inserts bits of information and facts that are little known and kind of cool to knowâ”making it more of a personal read, like he is talking directly to you. (And, you never know when you will be asked that million dollar question that few people know the answer too!) In a hurry? Each company section is summarized at the end of each chapter.

If you have even the most basic interest in branding, marketing, retailing or just a love of business, you would be advised not to read this book if you have a lot of things calling on your time. It is addictive! Here is a behemoth of a book, crammed full of information that you just want to read. You wonder if the authors have been locked away in an office for a decade gathering information, such is the detail being presented. In many ways it is overwhelming. Yet it does not feel it is padded out, far from it - it is feared what the draft might have been before an editorâ”s sharp knife had been wielded. At first glance, the price of this book might give you sticker shock (and you know this will be discounted through certain online vendors) but it is not unjustified. In short you get a history of 18 of the worldâ”s consumer goods brands - Coke, Colgate-Palmolive, Danone, Dean Foods, EstÃ©e Lauder, General Mills, Heinz, Henkel, Kellogg, Kimberly-Clark, Kraft, L’OrÃ©al, Mars, NestlÃ©, Procter & Gamble, Pepsi, Reckitt Benckiser and Unilever. This is not a U.S.-centric focus either as the performance of the overseas business units is brought into sharp view, showing how many â”distant outpostsâ” might lead the way. In addition a number of profiles are given for companies who are strong competitors in their regional markets and it could be interesting in the future to look back at this book and see if they managed to break out of their regions and come to dominate on the world stage. Make no mistake. This is not just a â”boringâ” series of company profiles. Invest the time in the book and you cannot fail to take away a lot of actionable business information that can still be relevant today.
